Excerpt from A Plan for an University Extension Department: To Be Used as Basis of Discussion at the Conference on University and Public Service, Wednesday Afternoon, August 25, 1915 Fifty millions of men God gives us to mould; burning questions, keen debate, great interests trying to vindicate their right to be, sad wrongs brought to the bar of public judgment, - these, says Wendell Phillips, are the people s schools. He continues, Trust the people - the wise and the ignorant, the good and the bad - with the gravest questions, and in the end you educate the race. At the same time you secure, not perfect institutions, not necessarily good ones, but the best institutions possible while human nature is the basis and the only material to build with. That is the fundamental faith back of the extension movement. It is the faith of democracy. It finds expression in the potent influence of public opinion among us. It is the advice of Washington in his Farewell Address: Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened. The Problem of University Cooperation in Helping the State There is going on everywhere the educational extension movement. The establishment of evening schools, summer schools, continuation schools, chautauquas, reading circles, short courses, are only so many evidences of this. The movement has found, however, its most significant expression as a state movement in connection with a state university. Massachusetts now undertakes pioneer work in a new phase of it.
