Opportunity for laboratory practice has however been offered to all who wished it, after the regular school hours; and this opportunity has been sought by a number of those who showed the deepest interest in the study, and the greatest aptitude for it. In both Physics and Chemistry, much attention is paid to their mathematical applications, and problems of some difficulty are freely given, as well as those simpler ones which are common in most text-books, especially of Physics. GEOLOGY. Geology is taught partly by recitations from a text-book, partly by sub-lecture, on which the pupils take notes, and are held responsible for a knowledge of whatever additional matter they may contain. Much attention is given to leading the pupils to draw for themselves the inferences which geologists consider warranted by certain states of fact, --as to the climate of the earth, and the position, extent and state of its land and water masses in the several geological periods, and as to the time and probable causes of the most notable physical and vital changes of the globe; and thus the study is made to afford some incidental training in probable Reasoning. At the outset the pupils are familiarized with the minerals that enter most largely into the composition of rocks by the study of a considerable collection of minerals, mostly unlabelled, belonging to the school. Their attention is directed solely to the various forms of Quartz, the Felspars, Mica, Calcite,...
